

This whole situation has been really tough. I was just trying to get clarity from someone I met this semester — someone I thought I could genuinely build a meaningful connection with — but I ended up crossing boundaries without fully realizing.

I handled it as maturely as I could. Honestly, I didn't expect her to unblock me after I contacted her boyfriend, but she did. I made sure to leave it respectfully, made it clear that I didn't expect anything, and left it in a way where both of us could have our own space.

Her boyfriend later sent me a message that felt kind of threatening — I didn't like that, so I blocked him. She's now blocked me again too.

I've really been focusing on my growth since this semester started, and I just hope someone out there can genuinely see the person I'm trying to become. One day, I hope to build a meaningful connection with someone who truly sees that.

I'd genuinely appreciate it if I could become uni friends with any of you guys too. No pressure at all — just putting it out there.

I don't expect anything from you guys — just wanted to put this out there. Thanks for hearing me out. 🍀 i would appreciate if you would stop reaching out on different accounts and also asking through my boyfriend because it's becoming way too much now.

your making me more uncomfortable than i even was before by trying to reach out to me on any avenue not only that but you doing this right after my massive surgery is honestly really upsetting, as it's not really stressful but it's aggravating and anxiety inducing that your not only messaging ME but now your also trying to message my friends and my bf

I'm really sorry for all of this — especially for trying to contact you through other means after you made your boundaries clear.

Something similar happened last year in high school, and I've been working on it since then. I can see now that I approached this the wrong way.

I just really wanted to clarify things so I could understand, but I do respect where you're coming from.

I'll leave it here now so we can both have space. I hope you have a good break and that all your courses go well next semester.

Try talk to my gf again and ur dead